*EPA study,

'shows that electronics make up almost 2% of the municipal solid waste stream. Mercury in electronics has been cited as a leading source in municipal waste...

... as tracked in the Municipal Solid Waste Characterization

Report @ www.epa.gov

Substances of concern in electronics are: mercury, lead, cadmium, & other harmful toxics. *EPA circular 2006

Electronic waste has become a huge problem in the U.S. E-Waste contains toxic materials that can contaminate our ground water and air quality.

By participating in E-Waste recycling, we can help prevent these toxic substances from contaminating our air and water.
